An Irresistible Offer

How To Put Together A Great Offer:

Has to be FOR THEM

Has to be REAL

Has to make Financial Sense

Has to be easy to say YES to

How To Get Clients

-Does it make sense to them?

-Can you reach them?

-Are there enough of them?

-do you have a connection somewhere (no matter how weak)

Ultimate Outreach Checklist

Is it quick and easy to consume?

Is it to the point?

Would a human being ever say this?

Is it clear what you want them to do?

Finding Endless Prospects Hungry For Your Service

Make a list of the people you know who own a local business.

Make a list of the people that are known by people you know... that own a local business.

See if your network has anyone. It usually has. Those are great candidates for a case study because there is ZERO downside for them and unlimited upside.

Make a list of 10 different niches. Local businesses working locally. Use the checklist we created in Day 2. Most importantly, because for some reason a lot of people screw this up, they need to be REACHABLE.

Start doing outreach. Message has to be:

Short, to the point, relevant, human, helpful.

Example message, feel free to use:

Hi <name>,

Noticed you're currently not showing up in the top 3 in <their location> for <their keyword>.

We help local businesses get into the top 3 Google Maps results within 90 days - guaranteed.

Based on your local competition I'm confident we can do the same for you.

Can I send a 2-minute video showing exactly how we'd do this for you?

If the answer is YES you send them a Loom video explaining this. Here's lessons on how to record a great Loom:

My Drop Dead Simple Sales Formula To Sell Anything

My super simple formula for selling anything:

Have a great offer

Sell to people that would benefit from taking your offer

Figure out what these people were doing before to make sure your offer is a good fit

Tell these people what your offer is, including limitations (so you don't trigger the Third World Selling methodology)

Have some sort of risk reversal

Tell them what to do next

Pricing and Objections

Pricing Models

When it comes to pricing you need to pick something and that is the hill you die on AT LEAST FOR THAT SALESCALL.

So you need to have this ready to rock. And you need it memorized. And you can't hesitate.

Four options for pricing models.

- 1) Free in exchange for case study
- 2) Paid upfront in full (we are using this)
- 3) Paid 50% upfront, 50% after getting the result
- 4) Paid after getting the result

I don't particularly like number 4. I'm also not in love with 3. I like 1 and 2. Mostly 2, because it gets you paid.

I genuinely think that number 2? Gets you the least amount of objections.

Now - what do you charge? In terms of money? Think about this and answer me in the chat please:

Let's say it takes you in total over the next few weeks 20 hours to get them to page 1 on Google. Or top 3. Whatever you pick.

What would you be happy with in terms of payment for 20 hours of work PLUS a case study PLUS a successful and happy client PLUS the solid opportunity and high chance of upselling them on stuff in the future?

Real quick, shit like this: depends on the niche and how much they can profit. I would ask for $500

Makes very little sense. It makes your business impossible to scale and it allows you to fuck around with pricing way too much.

I want you to pick a price and stick with it.

Also, shit like: 'I am not motivated to work for cheap' also makes little sense.

If you have zero experience and you want to build up a portfolio of successful experiences... why not start on the lower end of the spectrum? Your reward is not just money. It's experience, it's a case study, it's a chance to upsell, there's a fuckton of upsides to successful client trajectories.

So, in short, pick whatever number you'd be comfortable with and know that you can always work up from there once you start getting momentum and things start going better and better.

Someone asks if you can change price between clients. Answer: yes. I would just change prices moving forward in time from a certain moment. So for example - today we changed from $1000 to $2000. And Can texted and emailed every old lead, still on the fence, saying:

We've had a lot of demand for this offer and we're raising the price to 1500GBP.

Because we've quoted you the old price of 750GBP we'd be happy to honor that price for clients signing on for the remainder of this week, until November 15.

If this is not the right time for you that's absolutely fine. Just wanted to make sure you didn't miss out on the old pricing.

Boom. Done.

Objections

Some of these vary with your pricing model. For example the first is easily answered if you're not charging them or if you're charging them afterwards or 50/50.

What if this doesn't work?

<depends on pricing thing, but let me answer based on the pricing I use>

Google has been ranking local business using roughly the same parameters for about 10 years now. I know this is going to work. Because it has been mostly unchanged, save for some nuance, for a decade. In the unlikely case that we work together and after two weeks Google decides: "you know what? The way we've been ranking millions and millions of businesses worldwide for over a decade really sucks. We should completely and totally change everything about it today"

If that happens we won't get the result and we'll happily refund you.

I estimate that the odds of that happening are about as high as a zombie apocalypse hitting tomorrow. So I'll take that risk.

I know all about this, it's just a bunch of fake testimonials, that's how Google ranks things. So how much are you charging for this fake shit?

<if someone is being openly combative it's usually easiest to just move on. We're not in the combat business. We're in the making clients happy business. But let's say you want to handle this>

No, that's not the way Google ranks at all. If this was true the guy with most testimonials would always win. You can google right now, in fact, try it out, for shits and giggles, google "your niche near me" and tell me true if the guy with MOST testimonials is number 1 and it's just a linear path from most testimonials to least, going from 1-10.

<And then you shut up>

IF they keep arguing, just leave.

IF they look it up and realize that they were wrong - you basically tell them: 'you're the expert in your field. I would NEVER in a THOUSAND YEARS tell you how to do your business. I am an expert in my business. I know this upside down, inside out, front to back, back to front. So no, it has nothing to do with fake testimonials or any of that low quality scammer bullshit.

Can you do it for less?

<Best answer>: No, we charge all of our clients this amount for this service

<if he persists> I could give you a fake price and a fake discount and pretend like I'm giving you a deal. But I'm not really about that. I know we can do this, this is the price, would love to work with you. If not, it's all good. Let me know.

How has this worked with other clients?

<you have to nail this because what they're asking you is: do you know your shit? It's a polite way to gauge if you're an expert>

<<this is one that you really really really need to practice. Because it nukes other objections at the same time>>

Yes, there's definitely a pattern. So here's what's going to happen:

First we close the obvious gaps. Obvious for us, because we do this all the time. So we close the most pressing issues, put a bandage on those, stop the bucket from leaking. And what tends to happen is that you see a pretty big leap right away in the first 4-6 weeks.

Then we go on to fix things with the onsite SEO and the citations. That usually requires a bit more work AND it also requires a bit more time. Not because of something on our end, just because we're depending on third parties for this. Let me give you an example.

So, one of the factors in the Google ranking is that it looks at other websites pointing towards your business. Mentioning it or linking it. And the more high reputation the other website is, the better your ranking is going to be.

We have a checklist of about 47 of these. Most you would never think about. Simple example - Google considers Toyota a very trusted source. Obviously. Because it's a world famous car brand. Toyota has navigational software in their cars. You can actually let Toyota know about a business and make sure the nav software knows about your business. Google picks this up and decides: 'hey, this MUST be a real important real business. Because they went through the trouble of making sure the world knows about them.'

That's ONE example. And when we go through our list it usually takes every person on that list a different amount of time to list your business. It's going to happen, but we don't know exactly when. So over the course of weeks your business floats upwards. Until you reach page 1 and we're all happy.

Can you send me 42 testimonials and client phone numbers and a bloodsample and a DNA sample and a stool sample? And maybe your firstborn child as well?

<Right answer is>

We've done this for quite a few clients. What's going to happen is... <and then you use the previous story that I sketched out>

<if they persist in asking for ridiculous things it usually means they're broke or paranoid or both. Or they just simply don't trust you. In that case:>

We have a guarantee in place, I know we can do a great job BUTTTTTTTTT if you don't feel comfortable doing this? You shouldn't do it. If it doesn't make logical sense for you? You shouldn't do it.

Getting Paid With Silky Smooth Onboarding

Getting paid

So how do I do this if I'm an illegal boat refugee from Somalia and my bank is a sock that's behind the couch in my cousin's house.

Answer: I don't fucking know. That's for you to figure out.

For most normal situations you can do: Stripe, bank transfer, crypto, Wise, any other banking / billing platform in the world.

In general, I really like Stripe. And before I used Stripe I just used crypto and bank transfer.

Main point: IF THEY WANT WHAT YOU'RE SELLING THEY WILL FIND A WAY.

Onboarding

There's 2 steps to this.

1) the initial email after the call. Let me show you the example that we use:

Hi <name>,

Following up on our call with a quick summary:

Setup = $ fee (one-time).

The general idea is:

- Improve upon the current Google My Business rankings
- If any behind the scenes work needs to be done we'll ask for login info and take care of as much of it as possible.
- We'll monitor the progress and let you know how things are going on a weekly basis.

If that works for you we're ready to get started. Below is the payment link:

<Arnos stripe link>

Talk soon,

Arno

As you can see I'm announcing that I'll be asking them for more... but I'm not asking for more because this email is strictly for the purpose of finding out... are these people going to work with me?

Second email is the actual onboarding.

Onboarding email:

Hey <name>, it's Can. Let's get started with onboarding you and getting access to your profile + website.

To get access to your Google Business profile, you just have to click on the following link (<https://app.leadzie.com/connect/to/profresults/google-business-profile>) and then follow all the steps shown on screen. This will only work if your Google Business profile is already verified. So please make sure it is.

To get access to your website, you can do one of two things:

- 1) Give us direct login details and the name of your website building tool
- 2) Create a member account in your website builder and invite arno@profresults.com as an editor (so we can make changes)

We will obviously contact you before we change anything on your website.

So, the next step for you right now is giving us access to both things above. After we get access, we will analyze the entire backend so we can find action items to tackle the top 3.

P.S. Always let me know if something doesn't work out right or you have trouble setting up. We're ready to help you out.

Talk soon,

Can Ersöz

profresults.com (<http://profresults.com/>)

IG (https://www.instagram.com/profresults_/)

In short, we ask them for access to GBP and access to website.

Expectation management (will be continued)

- 1) we won't make sweeping / extensive changes to what you have without letting you know
- 2) We will have a weekly update for you every week. (this is what weekly means, just dump it into your calendar for every Friday)
- 3) If I need anything from you I will let you know through email/whatsapp/text/carrier pigeon

Managing expectations is about preventing complaints and setting their minds at ease

How To Rank Any Local Business On The Top Page Of Google - Part 1

If you want to improve something you first need to understand how it works.

Please understand this: the Google algo for ranking local businesses has not meaningfully changed in a decade.

That is 10 years. TEN YEARS.

For the same reason that a crocodile hasn't changed in about 600 million years. If it works, it works. You get to peak functionality at some point.

Practically speaking this means that you learn this skill today and it will serve you for years and years and years and years to come.

Install the GMB Everywhere browser plugin. It's really nice and handy and it's free.

There are three pillars to ranking a local business in the maps results. Which is where we want to rank.

Pillar 1: Your Google Business Profile

Pillar 2: Your onsite SEO

Pillar 3: Your citations

Every day we're going to cover one of these.

Always remember that you must BE the wizard. But you can never show the magic that goes on behind the scenes. Because when you do it loses all its shine immediately.

Using data we figure out what the algo likes and what it rewards. So we figure out what everyone else is doing and we complete whatever is incomplete. The algo rewards for completeness because it enhances user experience.

GMB everywhere is cool because it lists important ranking factors in rough order.

How To Sell In A Non-Cringe Way

Bread-crumbing as a selling technique

You can never be cringe if you make sure people move TOWARDS you. They ask YOU about things.

If we put together a trail that leads to us we're doing well. Whoever is a good client will pick up the trail. Whoever is not... won't. And it's all good.

For whom the bell tolls. They'll show up.

Demonstrating competence by... being competent.

Let's say we're in a businessy social scenario. Barbecue or something. Christmas get together. Who knows.

There's a dude and you know he has a business. You approach.

APPROACH 1 - Tardpocalypse

Hey man, you own a chiropractic practice on Main Street right?

-Yes

Awesome because I help chiropractors rank higher on Google and get more clients and make more money that probably sounds interesting to you right? You want to make more money right? You want to get more clients right!? RIGHT!?

RRRRRRRRRRRIIIIIIIIIIGGGGGGGGGGGGGGGGGHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHTTTTTTTTTT
TTTTTTTTTT!??

APPROACH 2 - The breadcrumb

Hey man, how are you?

- Awesome

You run the chiropractic thing, right? On Main street?

- yes

How have things been?

- fine. Bit quiet. All good though.

Nice. Good to hear you doing well. I actually worked with a podotherapist recently. They had a quiet period as well. Managed to turn that around, luckily. Now they're doing really well.

<IF THE PERSON IS NORMAL AND EVEN MILDLY INTO THE CONVERSATION HE WILL THEN ASK: WHAT HAPPENED?>

- what happened / what did you do? / tell me more? / how did that go

Well, a lot of therapists, could be podotherapists, physio, chiropractors, dentists, you know, the whole medical care segment are obviously well respected. But Google has this weird way of ranking them. And when you figure out how to make sure that they rank YOU at the top? You get WAY more calls all of a sudden.

The Making Clients Happy Business

We are all in the making clients happy business. And really, truthfully, if you look at all your relationships with other humans you're in the 'making sure that the other person is at least mildly happy' business.

Number 1 when it comes to keeping people happy is:

communication

People value communication over almost anything and they will get supremely pissed off if you don't communicate. You could literally cure cancer and AIDS and achieve world peace and they will still be pissed off because you didn't communicate.

Expectation management is key especially when it comes to communication.

Which is why I would recommend all of you to have ONE DAY as your "update day". I have Friday.

If you tell them right from the get-go that FRIDAY = UPDATE DAY? They are fine waiting all week. Because they know you'll get back to them.

If your clients are happy EVERYTHING is possible and easy and smooth.
If your clients are unhappy EVERYTHING is impossible and hard and rough.

The Art Of The Frame

- clashing frames

Frame is the way you view the world. A lense, if you will.

When frames clash one always absorbs the other. And the convo continues in the dominant frame.

- analyst frame

Asking for endless information, making you justify basically everything in detail.

Can you send me case studies, can you send me info by mail, can you send me your DNA sample, can you send me a blood sample, can you send me your business ID and registration.

Think about it for a second. How many times have you asked someone for his Business ID or 47 case studies before you made a decision.

We kill the analyst frame by keeping the conversation fully focused on the actual subject matter.

One of the strongest frame killers / frame usurpers that we use in ProfResults is simply saying:

'all of the stuff that we're covering on this call will be sent to you through email as well. So it's all in writing'

You basically tell the analyst, the inner nerd, 'don't worry bro, your Star Wars figure is in the mail. Chill out now'

- power frame

This is another one that you guys struggle with. It's a client deciding that they're operating on a higher plane and are positioned in a higher echelon of life.

They will make this clear by talking to you in a similar way that you would talk to a child or a teenager. Condescending is probably the best word.

Best way of handling this dumb shit is:

- 1) Do not get angry
- 2) Relax, don't take it seriously, don't put too much weight on this bs
- 3) Put them in their place in a nice way
- 4) Disengage if they keep insisting on being a total cunt

It's quite similar to seeing people try to scam others. And sometimes they do it in a way where you're actually impressed. Most of the times not. Sometimes you are. Gotta respect the hustle.

How To Sell Continuity And Get Paid Forever

Selling products will make you money. Selling continuity will make you rich.

Continuity -in general- has higher lifetime customer value compared to one-off transactions. Continuity has the advantage of them forgetting to cancel OR them just finding it too much of a hassle to cancel.

You get a gym membership. And then you don't go for weeks. Or months. Or years. And they still bill you. They still whack your creditcard.

Think about this as well. If you sell one-off things, you start every month at zero. If you sell continuity you start every month at NOT zero.

Not zero is preferable. If I sell 20 clients into my $200 program I start EVERY month at $4000. Without actually doing anything, right?

What is standing between YOU and selling CONTINUITY is your positioning.

If they consider you the wizard? It's easy to sell continuity.
If they don't know you? It's hard.

Because: what if this guy is full of crap!? What if he's bullshitting? Then I'm connected to this dude and it will take forever to get rid of him and his bullshit.

So in general it's easier to sell continuity as an upsell OR to sell continuity if you're an actual person with influence and an audience.

Remember Sneako? Man tried to sell something similar to The Real World. And he got absolutely positively demolished. Man closed it down quietly.

Why? Because he didn't have the positioning necessary.

Also - he's now pretending like he was never friendly with Tate. So fuck that dude. Can't trust pencil necked snakes.

Luke Belmar same story.

So, my point is that the upsell is actually much much easier to do than the influence sell.

We sell them a one-off product. And once we've proven that we're the wizard? We now tell them that we're available to them as the wizard on a continuity basis.

So two things that will come into play

- 1) I do my wizarding work for you so you STAY where you are AND things get even better
- 2) (optional but recommended) I will not work with another guy from your hometown/zipcode/postal code/radius around you as long as you and I are working together. (DO NOT MAKE THE RADIUS RETARDEDLY BIG PLEASE)

In terms of positioning this and selling it, it's pretty easy and straightforward.

"Based on what you're telling me it makes sense to do X"

I swear to God and the Flying SPaghetti Monster and that Elephant God that the Indians like - this is roughly the pitch.

Because.....

..... you're a wizard.

The way we set this up is basically reminding them of the awesome result we got and then we say: "now that we have a solid base the best thing to do is to keep the maintenance going and just make sure that two things happen: 1) we don't lose what we have. 2) we keep floating upwards so competitors can't break our glass ceiling. That's why we put together a monthly package instead of a one time thing and this works in a way where we do work on your listings/rankings every week and we get in touch at least once a month, more if necessary. Also, if we keep working together in this regard our deal is that we DON'T work with another client in your niche in this zip code / a 2km radius / whatever. The price is $/month.

How To Pick A Niche And Dominate It

What makes for a good niche?

They can pay you

They are reachable

High ticket can be good because it's easy to justify your fee. Not mandatory though.

THIS IS WHY IM TELLING YOU TO WORK WITH LOCAL BUSINESSES. YOU CAN REACH THEM AND THEY ACTUALLY MAKE MONEY. AND THEY ACTUALLY PAY THEIR SUPPLIERS. WHICH IS YOU.

When to niche down + How to niche down

First thing that I tell everyone is to select multiple niches, let's say 10 and just start blasting to see which ones will work.

You don't know. And even if you think you know it doesn't matter. Because the market is the actual way to figure this out.

I would probably tell you to test a lot of things and niche down late. Not early. Because you want to be open to working with a decent amount of people before you pick.

How to expand into a niche

Once you've had decent exposure to a certain niche you can now dig deeper.

If you've been working with three local beauty salons it's going to be a hell of a lot easier to talk to other beauty salons across the country / world.

The more specific and FOR THEM you can make the offer? The better.

Paid Traffic -> niche selection

I'm running paid traffic now. We're getting leads regularly. The nice thing about Meta ads (we're running Meta ads) is that the algo shows it to an audience that the algo thinks is relevant.

This leads to all sorts of people responding that you wouldn't even think of.

This is another way for us to pick up more niches just by them coming to us.

How To Get A Steady Stream Of Referrals

When to ask for referrals

The best time to ask for referrals is very similar to the best first occasion to talk about upsells, cross sells, all that good stuff.

Best time is when they experience a positive result with you.

How to ask for referrals

I learned this in real estate and I haven't come across a better way to phrase it.

Learned this from a guy named Brian Buffini. And he would say AT THE END of conversations with clients:

"Oh by the way, I'm never too busy for your referrals"

Because I worked mostly in Europe I changed it a little because in my country it's not as common to talk about referrals

"Oh by the way, if you come across anyone that wants to <get good result that you provide> I'm never too busy for anyone you send my way"

This is how you get a steady stream of referrals. By continually -in a not annoying way- mentioning the fact that you're happy to help them and their friends, family, relatives, circle.

Client Management leading into referrals:

We used to send mail, like actual physical mail, to our clients every quarter at least. It paid off massively because of the simple fact that your competition is going to be too lazy to do any type of follow up or relationship building ever.

How to sell them

We start by obviously mentioning the fact that the person that referred you to them is great and we really appreciate the chance to talk.

If you get referred to someone I want you to treat as if these people never heard of you and they're completely cold.

Should you pay for referrals?

I never did. I'm not strongly against it but I never did. Maybe you can do a discount or something but I found that if I paid or gave discounts I ended up getting trash leads many times.

I just always worked with people on a 'do good' basis. And then AFTERWARDS I would reward them. For me, I would send them either flowers, a beautiful bouquet (about $50) and if they referred often I would send them some sort of a cool gift package. Could be chocolate, could be Lush (they do bath and shower stuff) .

Selling Local SEO And Cross Selling Services

- logistics structure

- 1) They send in a form or an email indicating interest. Could be from the ad or the cold email blasting or the cold calling.
- 2) Can records a Loom for them. Sends it over. And the CTA is: if you like this let us know and we'll tell you more
- 3) If they want to know more we schedule a salescall through zoom
- 4) We do the salescall, go over what we do and why they need it and what we would do for them and then I tell them that we'll send them a summary through email
- 5) We then send them an email with the summary and a payment link saying: if you want to work with us just handle this and we'll get you started
- 6) If they complete payment they get our onboarding email

- presentation structure

Very straightforward.

- 1) Introduction, small talk
- 2) Qualifying in a non-Gestapo way (pull a Joe Biden)
- 3) Presentation (if I were you, I would do this. Helpful but incomplete)
- 4) Offer
- 5) Closing -> here's what will happen
- 6) Objections (a lot of these need to be handled in the qualification stage)

- overcoming obstacles / objections

Ok, I got a business in Rotterdam but I want to rank in Amsterdam. Can you do that?

Answer: No. Obviously not.

Local SEO means we can rank you for a radius around your LOCATION. But if I'm in Amsterdam and you're 50km away and you're trying to compete with me for MY CITY... it's going to be borderline impossible. Because Google factors in proximity.

Now, for the autists and the retards:

I did NOT say it is impossible. I did NOT say you can;t rank in one city if you're located in another city.

- what to do when it doesn't fit the mold

Every once in a while you get the dude that wants something that is impossible. This is when you try cross selling.

Guy has a chiropractic clinic in a city and he wants to get clients in the other city that's 30km away. For this man it makes much more sense to run Google ads and/or Meta ads.

The way you cross sell is basically by saying: "we need to use the right tools for the right job. GBP is for LOCAL stuff. Since you're 30km away there's a good chance it's going to be hard to beat people IN the other city. So either we have a location in the other city OR we just use the right tool which is... <insert whatever you want to sell that makes sense>

Here's the doc I'm using for client work:

Bookmark it because it will be updated over time.

Stuff I want to cover in this live:

- GBP updates + geotagging
- Match socials to GBP
- Making sure the map + NAP is EVERYWHERE

Posts are great to

- 1) indicate to Google AND users that you're active
- 2) talk about your services

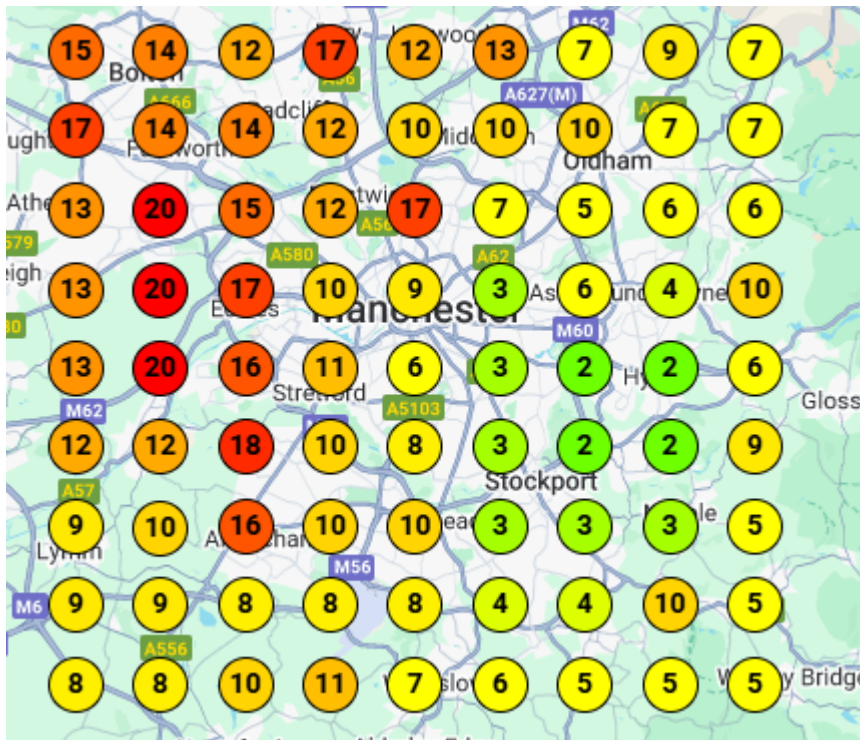

At least once a week. Preferably twice.

In the same interface you can add pictures.

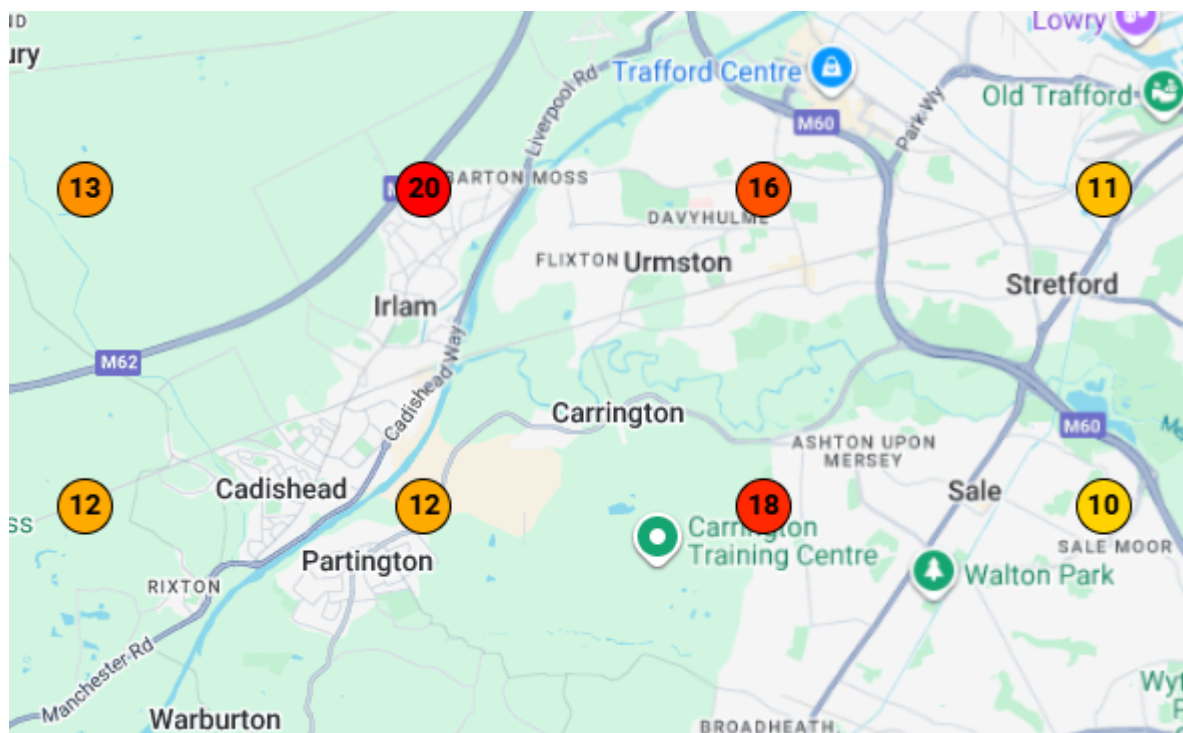

What you can do to the photos is geotag them. Meaning - you can tell Google where this photo was taken. What location.

Now, if you're heatmap looks like this:

Let's say you want to rank for Irlam

Because you're at lower than 20 for that.

You geotag your photo for Irlam. And you give Google the signal that you're working in IRLAM. Which in turn gives Google the incentive of ranking you higher for Irlam.

One tool you can use is:

<https://tool.geoimgr.com/>

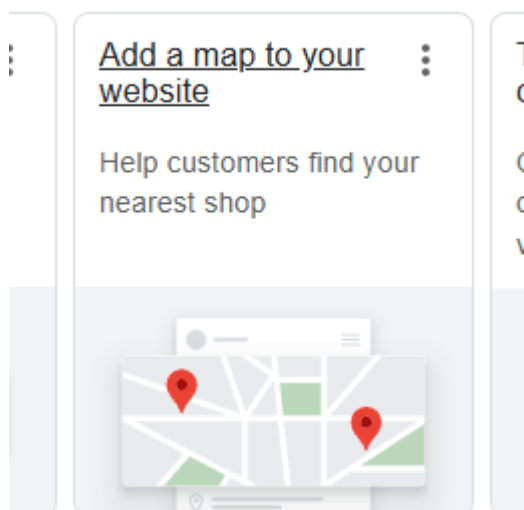

bUt wHaT iF I dOnT hAve pHoTos?

You AI generate something, make sure it looks half decent, and then you screenshot it and you dump the screenshot into the geotag tool.

Match socials to GBP

Meaning - Facebook, LinkedIn, Instagram, YouTube, Twitter -they allllllllllll have NAP info and they're all synchronized with your business info on GBP.

Making sure the map + NAP is EVERYWHERE

They will give you the ability to just implement a map of your location on your website. Perfect for contact us BUT even more perfect for... the footer on every page of the website.

Advanced Local SEO - part 2

- build your 10 citations every business should have.

Citations are a hassle. Not gonna lie, it's just a slog. For a LOT of these you need your client to set it up. Usually one time. But once it's set up you're off to the races.

You can also buy a lot of citations. Issue is that the software is either going to be PRICEY or the citations are going to be SHIT.

We are looking for a few really good citations to build a base. One strong citation is worth as much or more than 50 weak ones. Quality over quantity. And make triple quadruple quintuple sure these ALL show the same NAP. Name. Address. Phone number.

If you do the core 10 you stand a great chance of outperforming someone with 200 lower quality bullshit citations.

A quick example list:

Apple Maps
Bing Places
Facebook
Yelp
Yext Powerlisting (former yellow pages)
Better Business Bureau (or local equivalent)
NextDoor
Tripadvisor
Foursquare
Here Maps
TomTom

Some of these will be UK / US / whatever. Just swap for what works for you. Can also ask AI. It's easy and straightforward.

You can also ask AI for the niche specific ones in your specific country.

Now, how do you get on there?

You either:

1) work with your client on this

OR

2) buy from a reputable citation provider

2 is usually preferable because it's just less hassle.

We've tried out Leadsnap. It's OK.

We're now trying out Fatjoe (<https://fatjoe.com/>). Will report back.

If you work with the owner to get things set up and / or to get verification, the best thing to do is to make a list of the best ones, figure out which ones require clients to verify, send those to your client.

Can also spread them out over weeks so you don't overload them. If you ask him to do 3-5 a week that's doable for almost anyone.

What you would do BEFORE the salescall is

- 1) figure out what are the 10 best possible citations for <business> in <location>
- 2) Check if they have a citation on there
- 3) Note where they either have a wrong / missing address phone number name and note which ones they don't have
- 4) now you have endless ammunition for the salescall

Advanced Local SEO - Part 3

-Building out page count and interlinking pages (will cover in lesson in depth)

Google is HUNGRY for information about your business

What we'll try to do is to make it clear to Google that we are THE expert.

Experts talk about what they do. They explain. Because they know things.

So we might have a homepage that links to a couple of subpages. Maybe these are for our other categories or maybe they are for our main services.

Take this example:

<https://www.imaaplumbing.co.uk/plumbing-and-heating-repairs/water-pipe-repairs/>

plumbing-and-heating-repairs/ → this part is the category page / section

water-pipe-repairs/ → this part is the service section

Do you see the breadcrumbs that are on the floor here? The easy trail there is for a search engine to figure out what this is about?

If you get stuck at a certain point OR if your client really really really wants to rank for a lot of terms? This is the architecture to use and the way to do it.

You set up a home page. You set up, let's say 5-6 category pages / service area pages, you then set up let's say 4 service pages under each category page.

In a normal scenario you'd end up with about 20-30 pages total. You don't need a safety glass shower door for Brumblebee

safety glass shower door for Brumblebixton etc etc etc

- AI SEO -> AI is hungry for data just like Google (there's more, will cover in future. Not THAT important for now if you get the basics right)

LATER

- local schema (machine language, there's a ton of plugins for this, will cover in lesson)
- handling two or more locations

SPRINT - DAY 1

(we'll be moving this content to a new doc when I get everything sorted out. Don't stress about it, it's all good)

The idea right now is to select the best stuff from Business Mastery + BIAB + The Challenge and that becomes the curriculum.

Then every month we run a sprint. Which is a daily schedule that shows you what you're supposed to do in a day to make money. And in the sprint we'll refer to stuff that's in the curriculum (obviously) but sprinting is all about action.

We spend thousands of dollars every month with Profresults on getting data. We run ads, do email marketing, generate leads, the whole shebang.

What I want to do with the monthly content that I'm releasing in the sprints, updated EVERY MONTH is show you:

WHAT IS WORKING RIGHT NOW

What I'll talk about today is what niches are responding to our ads. If you want to approach niches that have decent response rates... these are probably pretty good.

NICHES THAT ARE RESPONDING TO OUR ADS RIGHT NOW:

- 1) Building + Construction + Renovation
- 2) Tree care (for example: tree surgeons, arborists, forestry services, tree consultants if that's a thing? etc)
- 3) Landscaping + Garden
- 4) Cleaning (like Pressure washing)
- 5) Roofing
- 6) Locksmiths

- 7) Paving and fencing
- 8) Gas / heating
- 9) Bridal everything
- 10) Catering / private dining

So if you're choosing a couple target client groups to approach, whether it be through email or DMs or cold calling or all of the above... this is probably a rock solid start for you.

So instead of you approaching dentists and fitness coaches... you actually approach people that you can help out and that are inclined to respond to marketing offers.
